WOMEN HUNTED TOO

TOOLS in the grave of a teenage woman show she hunted 9,000 years ago.

Stone dart heads and auting blades were found neatly stacked in the grave, high in the Andes mountains. The tools would have been used to kill and cut up prey.

The discovery turns on its head the idea that hunting was only done by men in prehistoric times.

A new study has looked at this and other female graves in the Americas. It shows that women hurters may have been quite common here during the Stone Age.

CZECH REPUBLIC

TAKE THAT, HUNTER GUY!

A DEER has stolen a gun from a hunter in a Czech ("check") village.

The man was out hunting with his dogs when he startled a deer. The stag turned on the man and charged. Its antiers tore through the man's shurt and got snagged on his rifle, before it fied.

The hurder had to report to the police that his weapon was missing. Thankfully, the gun was unloaded. Later, the police received a call from another hunter who said he saw a deer with a rifle dangling from its antiers!

SWEDEN

PURPLE SKY AT NIGHT

THE skies above Trelleborg in Sweden have turned peculiarly purple!

It looks mysterious and rather speaky, but it's actually because of a newly bulk tomato farm.

The farm uses an energy-saving light system that glows purple. It's meant to be good for the plants and help the tomatoes grow for longer.

However, people living close to the form aren't happy. They have asked that the form turns the lights off at night.

The owners of the farm have agreed, explaining: "People were not meant to be angry. We just wanted to save electricity and grow more."
